

Provo's friendly sanitation engineers pose beside their garbage trucks in the year 1947. Courtesy of Provo City.

they had completed the Deer Creek Dam and Reservoir project; the sewage had been extended; and in 1942 parking meters had been installed. In 1940 city officials determined by a survey that Provo citizens would approve of a systematic garbage and refuse disposal, and so large trucks were purchased at that time, and more modern equipment since.

Hospitals

wealth Fund of New York. Provo furnished a site for the hospital and donated $90,000. On 15 July 1953, at the request of the board of directors, it was turned over to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which has added to it in 1956, 1959, and 1971 until the bed count reached 260, the number of full-time staff workers rose to 675, and the number of physicians to 116. Now available for Provo medical services are a new surgical wing and a complete